Drug Policies and Programs in the Alexander Maconochie Centre (including Moore Report and consultations)

Balancing access and safety: meeting the challenge of blood borne viruses in prison

Report for the ACT Government into implementation of a needle and syringe program at the Alexander Maconochie Centre. Public Health Association of Australia, July 2011

The Public Health Association of Australia (PHAA) was engaged by the ACT Government in May 2011 to investigate and report on models for the implementation of an NSP in the AMC. The project also entailed an assessment of barriers to implementation and broad consultations with key stakeholders. The emphasis of the project has been on seeking to develop a model that ensures optimal health and safety outcomes for everyone impacted upon by a custodial sentence. This includes not only the person being detained in custody but all prison staff and the broader community. This report outlines outcomes and recommendations from the project and proposes a way to meet this challenge.

Health Directorate Consultations

The Health Directorate is seeking stakeholder views on the report and its recommendations ahead of finalising its response. The Health Directorate is now engaged in a six-week consultation period which will run from Thursday 28 July 2011 – Thursday 8 September 2011. For further information, including the Chief Minister's media release and the PHAA report visit: <http://www.health.act.gov.au/consumer-information/community-consultation/moore-report-implementation-of-a-needle-and-syringe-program>

ATODA Consultations: NSP in AMC

ATODA will be engaging stakeholders in a range of ways, including a meeting on:

Date: Thursday 4 August

Time: 9am – 10:30am

Venue: ATODA office (350 Antill St., Watson)

RSVP: Essential to carrie@atoda.org.au (limited numbers)

Further consultations will occur - including through ATOD sector advisory structures, including the ACT ATOD Workers Group, Executive Directors Group and ATODA Board and engagement with stakeholders including ACTCOSS and the Community Integration Governance Group.

Establishment of a High level joint Justice and Community Safety Directorate (JACSD) / Health Directorate (HD) Advisory Group

The ACT Government's final response to the External component of the evaluation of drug policies and services and their subsequent effects on prisoners and staff *within the Alexander Maconochie Centre (the Burnet Report) was released in June. In response to Recommendation 2, the ACT Government has indicated an intention, through the powers of the Director General, JACSD, under Corrections Management Act 2007, to establish a 'high level joint JACSD/HD advisory group that would advise the Director General of the HD and have responsibility for making recommendations on the implementation of integrated health policies and services in the AMC'. ATODA is a member of this group and the first meeting is scheduled for 3 August.*

Workshop on Programs and Services for the AMC Population: Assessing the Needs and Filling the Gaps 25 May 2011 (Final Report)

The final report following the 25 May 2011 Workshop on Programs and Services for the AMC Population: Assessing the Needs and Filling the Gaps has been released. The workshop provided a positive base from which to plan future programs and service delivery in a more targeted and effective manner and utilising to best advantage the combined expertise available across the ATOD sector. Discussion also identified existing barriers to service provision in the AMC and suggestions for overcoming these. The report also provides details of the follow-up activities undertaken since the workshop to realise directions set at the workshop.

Are prisoners entitled to compensation for inadequate drug treatment in prison?

A group of prisoners and ex-prisoners in the United Kingdom is being compensated for the inadequacy of their treatment while in prison. 'The UK government has agreed to pay more than £2m (€2.3m; $3.2m) in compensation and costs to settle claims by 499 prisoners and former prisoners with drug addiction who say that they suffered from a systemic failure by the prison service to ensure that they received acceptable standards of treatment for their addiction.'

This is the second group of prisoners to receive compensation. 'The last Labour government paid £750 000 in compensation and £700 000 in costs to settle an earlier claim in 2006, brought by 200 prisoners and former inmates who were subjected to a rapid detoxification regime, shortly before the case was due to go to trial in the High Court.

The Home Office, the department then responsible for prisons, received legal advice that the standards of care the inmates received in the late 1990s fell short of acceptable medical standards and the prison service's own guidelines for dealing with prisoners addicted to heroin and decided to settle to avoid the costs of a trial.' Dyer, C 2011, 'Poor treatment of drug addicts in prison costs UK more than £3.5m in compensation and fees', BMJ, vol. 343, p. d4438 (news item).

Expanding Naloxone Availability in the ACT

Broad support continues to build for action, and a program is being designed, to expand the availability of naloxone (Narcan ®) in the ACT.

How many ex-prisoners die soon after release from prison, and what do they die from?

Research reported in the Medical Journal of Australia reveals that ‘The estimated annual number of deaths among recently released prisoners in Australia is considerably greater than the annual number of deaths in custody, highlighting the extreme vulnerability of this population on return to the community’. The researchers estimate that ‘between 380 and 527 people released from prison in 2007–08 died within 1 year of release, with a disproportionate number dying in the first 4 weeks’. They found that ‘a large proportion of deaths in both cohorts [NSW and WA] was drug-related, highlighting the ongoing need to develop and implement evidence-based strategies to reduce drug-related death among ex-prisoners. One such strategy is opiate substitution therapy, which has been associated with reduced mortality, reincarceration and hepatitis C infection in ex-prisoners. Yet, despite unambiguous endorsement of opiate substitution therapy in the National Corrections Drug Strategy 2006–2009, its provision in Australian prisons remains inconsistent. Another suggested approach is the provision of naloxone for peer administration. A clinical trial of naloxone provision to those at risk of overdose on release from prison has been proposed but not yet conducted’.

However, ‘Although drug overdose is a leading cause of death for recently released prisoners, more than 50% of deaths in this study were not drug-related, and at least two-thirds of deaths in the first year occurred more than 1 month after release. These findings underscore the importance of moving beyond simplistic messages about reduced drug tolerance and overdose risk in the first few weeks of release’.

ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND CULTURAL RIGHTS

Community Consultation: Economic, Social And Cultural Rights - A Good Idea For The Act?

ACT Council of Social Service

Consultation period ends: Friday 19 August 2011.

The ACT Government invites you to participate in the community consultation about the possible inclusion of economic, social and cultural rights in the ACT. Economic, social and cultural rights (ESCR) are human rights that belong to individuals and include the rights to housing, health, education, work, and to take part in cultural life. ACTCOSS has long advocated for the inclusion of the ESCR in the ACT Human Rights Act. You can access previous ACTCOSS submissions on Human Rights issues at www.actcoss.org.au/publications/Policy_docs.html#9.

More information about making a submission is available at www.justice.act.gov.au/review/view/13.

A 5-minute online survey is also available for you to send your views to the Government about ESCR at www.surveymonkey.com/s/JJY8366.

ATODA will be making a contribution to this submission process – please contact Carrie Fowlie on carrie@atoda.org.au to share your views.

Synthetic cannabis (aka Kronic) banned

The ACT Government made it illegal to manufacture, obtain, possess, supply, sell and/or use products containing synthetic cannabis (synthetic cannabinoids) in the ACT as from 8 July 2011. This followed automatically from a decision by the Commonwealth Government made on the recommendation of the Australian Therapeutic Goods Administration (TGA) <http://www.tga.gov.au/pdf/scheduling/scheduling-decisions-1107-final.pdf>.

What is synthetic cannabis?

Synthetic cannabis includes a range of synthetic compounds that mimic the effects of the active component in cannabis, delta-9 tetrahydrocannabinol (THC).

Synthetic cannabis can be found in products with brand names such as Kronic, Northern Lights, Kaos, Spice, Mango and Voodoo. These products usually consist of dried herbs that are sprayed with synthetic cannabis, which are then smoked for their cannabis-like effects.

What do we know about the 'New Marijuana'?

The Health Directorate advises that the ban of synthetic cannabinoids covers drugs with brand names such as Kronic, Northern Lights, Kaos, Spice, Mango and Voodoo. An article recently published in The Annals of Pharmacotherapy provides an overview of existing knowledge about this class of drugs that supplements TGA's summary. Its abstract reads: 'Synthetic cannabinoid-induced toxicity is increasing in frequency across the US, with more than 1057 reported cases as of August 2010. There is a paucity of literature on synthetic cannabinoid toxicity; however, there are various reports of adverse effects including tachycardia, hypertension, tachypnea, chest pain, heart palpitations, hallucinations, racing thoughts, and seizures. While reports suggest that toxic symptoms last no longer than 3-4 hours, with no residual adverse effects in many cases, there is concern about serious acute and long-term toxicities. This article reviews the development, abuse, toxicity, treatment, and legal status of synthetic cannabinoids. It is important for health-care professionals to recognize and appropriately treat synthetic cannabinoid-induced toxicity.'

How many people are arrested for illicit drugs offences in the ACT?

The Australian Crime Commission's report on illicit drug arrests for the 2009-10 year has been released. It shows that, in that year, the ACT had 386 arrests for illicit drug offences, and that 73 Simple Cannabis Offence Notices (SCONs) were issued. 89% of the arrests plus SCONs were classified as drug consumers and only 11% drug providers. In contrast, nationally 81% were consumers. With regard to cannabis specifically, 93% of arrests plus SCONs were cannabis consumers, compared with 86% nationally. In the ACT that year there were also 100 arrests for amphetamine-type stimulants, 30 for heroin & other opioids, 8 for cocaine, 3 for steroids and 1 for hallucinogens. In addition to detailed statistics, the report provides valuable information on drug trafficking and criminal justice agencies' responses. It contains a special chapter on clandestine laboratories and precursors which reports a 55% increase in the number of clandestine laboratories detected nationally compared with the previous year. 90% of the labs were for the manufacture of amphetamine-type stimulants. No clandestine labs were detected in the ACT in the 2009-10 year. Australian Crime Commission 2011, Illicit drug data report 2009-10, Australian Crime Commission, Canberra, http://www.crimecommission.gov.au/publications/iddr/2009_10.htm.

Which drugs are being detected in Victoria's roadside drug testing program?

In Victoria, oral fluid (saliva) specimens from motor vehicle drivers have been tested for the presence of three proscribed drugs, namely methamphetamine and THC since 2003, and MDMA since 2006. In a recent study, 31 drugs were tested for among 853 oral fluid specimens taken from drivers by Victoria Police during roadside drug testing operations. The analysts found that 'At least one proscribed drug was detected in 96% of drivers, of which [methamphetamine] was the most common (77%), followed by THC (42%), MDMA (17%) and the combination of all three (3.9%). Opioids were detected in 14% of drivers of which 4.8% were positive for 6-acetylmorphine and 3.3% for methadone. The incidence of the opioids tramadol (1.2%) and oxycodone (1.1%) were relatively low. Cocaine (8.0%) was as commonly detected as benzodiazepines (8.0%), and was almost always found in combination with [methamphetamine] (7.9%). Samples positive to benzodiazepines were largely due to diazepam (3.5%) and alprazolam (3.4%), with only 0.2% of drivers combining the two. Ketamine was also detected in 1.5% of cases.' The authors conclude that, 'While the incidences of the proscribed drugs itself are concerning, it is clear that many drivers are also using other drugs capable of causing impairment. Chu, M, Gerostamoulos, D, Beyer, J, Rodda, L, Boorman, M & Drummer, OH 2011, 'The incidence of drugs of impairment in oral fluid from random roadside testing', Forensic Science International, available online 12 June 2011.

How effective are motor vehicle ignition interlocks in reducing alcohol-impaired driving and alcohol-related crashes?

A systematic review of the literature on this topic found that 'DWI [driving while impaired] offenders who have ignition interlocks installed in their vehicles are at substantially lower risk for recidivism than those who have had their licenses suspended either after being deemed ineligible for an interlock or deciding not to have one installed. These findings also suggest that the experience of being enrolled in an ignition interlock program by itself does not generally lead to long-term changes in the propensity to drink and drive that last beyond the period of interlock installation'. The reviewers suggest that 'Some key features of interlock programs that could improve their effectiveness include increasing the time period during which the interlock is installed or making the removal contingent on appropriate behaviors [sic], using the interlock in conjunction with alcohol rehabilitation programs, increasing the number of participants, and improving protections against circumvention of the interlocks'.

Why did Portugal decriminalise drug use, and what has been the effect?

The European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction has a new publication series 'Drug Policy Profiles'. The first describes the national drug policy of Portugal. In the conclusion of the Profile, the authors state 'The debates [in Portugal] around the drug laws of 1983, 1993 and 2000...show a progressive move towards a model that clearly prioritises early intervention and treatment over any form of sanction. This transition is the result, among others, of an established and growing agreement among political parties in Parliament on the need to address drug use as a health issue and not as a criminal matter...What makes the Portuguese case special is that decriminalisation was not, as in other countries, associated with an increasing prevalence of cannabis use among young people and the consequent difficulties for law enforcement bodies in coping with it. In Portugal, problem drug users—mainly heroin users—were the focus of the policy discussions and it was with them (and their problems) in mind that it was decided to change the law in 2000. The Portuguese policy also reflects the main elements of drug policy convergence that have been observed in the European Union over the last two decades: the development of an overarching and detailed policy; the acceptance of harm reduction interventions; the recognition of the drug user as a person in need of help and not as a criminal; and the attempt to further link or integrate illicit and licit drug policies.'

They comment 'The changes that were made in Portugal provide an interesting before-and-after study on the possible effects of decriminalisation, as the drug prevalence rates have not confirmed the theory that decriminalisation, or a less punitive approach, leads to increased use.'

Is mobile phone text messaging an effective way to help people quit smoking?

A recent issue of The Lancet reports on a clinical trial in the United Kingdom which involved 5,800 participants. Its aim was to assess 'the effect of an automated smoking cessation programme [txt2stop] delivered via mobile phone text messaging on continuous abstinence, which was biochemically verified at 6 months'. The researchers found that people who gave up smoking with the help of text messaging were nearly twice as likely to be smoke-free six months later than smokers who did not have this support.

The researchers concluded that 'The txt2stop smoking cessation programme significantly improved smoking cessation rates at 6 months and should be considered for inclusion in smoking cessation services'.

Does combining alcohol with energy drinks increase the risk?

Research in the United States has investigated whether young people who consumed alcohol mixed with energy drinks (AmED) would be more likely to become intoxication than if they consumed alcohol alone. It was found that 'An energy drink appears to alter some of the objective and subjective impairing effects of alcohol, but not others. Thus, AmED may contribute to a high-risk scenario for the drinker. The mix of impaired behavioral inhibition and enhanced stimulation is a combination that may make AmED consumption riskier than alcohol consumption alone'.
